22 INTRODUCTION

23 On May 5, 2008, Respondent, United States ("Government" or "USPTO"), moved to 24 dismiss Hornback's Petition for Writ of Mandamus, on the grounds that: (1) Hornback has not 25 established that this Court has jurisdiction over his Petition; and (2) Hornback cannot prove that
26 he is entitled to the drastic remedy of mandamus relief. In his Opposition, Hornback again fails
27 to cite a statute in which the Government waived its sovereign immunity. He also admits that 28 he failed to follow USPTO rules for submitting substitute claims. Thus, he cannot justify his

1 refusal to pursue avenues of relief available to him at the USPTO on the grounds that the alleged
 2 errors in his patent were not his fault. Therefore, because Hornback has failed to pursue
 3 administrative remedies available to him at the USPTO, and has otherwise not established that
 4 this Court has jurisdiction, his Petition should be dismissed.^{1/}

5 II

6 ARGUMENT

7 A. THIS COURT LACKS SUBJECT MATTER JURISDICTION 8 OVER HORNBACK'S CLAIMS

9 Hornback has not established that this Court has jurisdiction over his Petition. In its 10 Motion, the Government established that a writ of mandamus cannot be used to order the 11 Director to exercise his discretion. Motion at 10. In his response, Hornback did not dispute that 12 argument.

13 Furthermore, Hornback has not cited a statute in which the Government waived its 14 sovereign immunity. Id. In his Opposition, Hornback points to 35 U.S.C. § 131. Opp. at 2. But 15 that statute, styled "Examination of application," applies to examining patent applications and 16 has nothing to do with correcting an issued patent.

17 B. HORNBACK IS NOT ENTITLED TO MANDAMUS RELIEF

18 In his Opposition, Hornback again argues that he has exhausted his administrative 19 remedies. Opp. at 2. First, he alleges that the reissue statute, 35 U.S.C. § 251, is "NOT 20

21 ^{1/} Hornback has filed multiple lawsuits in connection with his missile guidance system and its 22 corresponding patent. Hornback initially pursued litigation in the Federal Court of Claims, then turned 23 any further litigation in that Court. The cases he has filed in this district include the following:
 24 Hornback v. United States, Case No. 07cv0289-JLS-AJB (S.D. Cal. Feb. 13, 2007); Hornback v. United
 25 States, Case No. 07-CV-01694 JLS-AJB (S.D. Cal. Aug. 28, 2007); Hornback v. United States, Case
 26 No. 06cv2113-BEN-AJB (S.D. Cal. Sept. 29, 2006) (dismissed); Hornback v. United States, Case No.
 27 06CV0825-BTM(RBB) (S.D. Cal. Aug. 15, 2006) (dismissed); Hornback v. United States, Case No.
 28 05CV2184-JM(AJB) (S.D. Cal. Mar. 7, 2006) (dismissed); Hornback v. United States, Case No.
 04CV0339-WQH(WMc) (S.D. Cal. Aug. 4, 2004), aff'd, 127 Fed. Appx. 964, 2005 WL 844627 (9th
 Cir. Apr. 13, 2005) (unpublished), cert. denied, 126 S. Ct. 665 (2005); Hornback v. United States, Case No. 94CV0952-IEG(LSP) (S.D. Cal. Sept. 21, 1995), aff'd, 91 F.3d 152, 1996 WL 368135 (9th Cir.
 June 28, 1996) (unpublished); Hornback v. United States, Case No. 89CV1914-R(M) (S.D. Cal. Oct.
 2, 1992), aff'd, 16 F.3d 422, 1993 WL 528066 (Fed. Cir. Dec. 22, 1993) (unpublished), cert. denied, 511
 U.S. 1070 (1994)

1 Applicable.” Opp. at 2.^{2/} Specifically, he claims that 35 U.S.C. § 251 only applies “where the
2 errors in the patent were the fault of the patentee, not the PTO.” Id. at 2-3.

3 Assuming Hornback is correct, that reissue can only be used to correct errors that were
4 the fault of the patentee, that option is still available to Hornback. In his Opposition, Hornback
5 admits that the alleged errors in his patent were his own fault. Specifically, Hornback
6 acknowledged that when he filed the second amendment, the one giving rise to the alleged error
7 in his patent, he failed to follow rules for substituting claims. Id. at 4, 8. Quoting at length the 8 Government’s analysis of the rules for submitting substitute claims (Motion at 17-18), he admits
9 that “he did, indeed, fail to number amended claims 3-6 as new claims 7-10 ,” as required. Id.
10 at 8. Thus, even under Hornback’s reading of the reissue statute, he is qualified to file a proper
11 request for a reissue. Consequently, his excuse for not pursuing this avenue of relief available
12 to him at the USPTO is unjustified. And it is worth noting that the USPTO has repeatedly stated
13 that reissue is the most appropriate vehicle for Hornback to attempt to correct the claims of his 14 issued patent.^{3/} Thus, reissue is an avenue of relief still available to Hornback should he choose
15 to pursue it.

16 Hornback further notes that the “PTO Refused to Reissue” his patent and returned his 17 check. Opp. at 3. But in doing so, he failed to dispute, much less address, the Government’s 18 contention that he “had not submitted anything resembling a proper request for a reissue of his 19 patent.” Motion at 14. In this same vein, Hornback argues that the USPTO erred in finding that 20 his amendments might broaden his claims, and would therefore, be improper. Opp. at 3. But 21 that debate is premature; it is an issue for an examiner to decide only if Hornback files a proper
22 reissue application. Motion at 14-15.

23 / / /

24 / / /

26 ^{2/} Throughout this Reply, Petitioner’s Opposition to Respondent’s Motion to Dismiss is 27 referred to as “Opp. at ____.”

28 ^{3/} The USPTO has not suggested that it can guarantee that his reissue application will issue
as a patent, but only represents that reissue is the appropriate avenue for Hornback to pursue to correct the claims of his issued patent.

1 Hornback admits that his issued patent contains claims “identical” to those in the first
2 May 1987 amendment,^{4/} which supports the Government’s contention that only those claims
3 were reviewed by the examiner and deemed patentable. Opp. at 4. Nevertheless, Hornback
4 contends that the examiner in fact “allowed” the second, later-filed version of claims 3-6.^{5/} Id.
5 In support, Hornback points to the Examiner’s response of June 11, 1987, in which the Examiner
6 noted receipt of the “communication” containing the second amendment. Id.

7 But the USPTO’s receipt of that filing is not the issue; the question is whether the USPTO
8 examined the claims contained within that second communication. As described in the 9 Government’s motion, the record shows that it did not examine those claims due to the confusion
10 caused by Hornback’s misnumbering of the claims. Motion at 17-18. Specifically, rather than 11 number the second version of claims, as 7-10, Hornback repeated the numbering he used in the 12 first amendment, assigning both sets the numbers 3-6. As a result, the second version of claims
13 3-6 were marked “duplicate,” and were never examined. Instead, the USPTO examined and 14 allowed the first version of claims 3-6. Id. As Hornback acknowledges, in submitting the 15 second set of claims, Hornback failed to follow the procedural rules designed to avoid just such 16 confusion. Id.

17 Finally, Hornback seems to argue that he has been unable to enlist the aid of a competent
18 patent attorney because his application was under a secrecy order. Opp. at 5-7. But that order
19 was lifted on April 21, 1999. Since at least that time, Hornback was free to seek assistance of 20 counsel without violating his duties of secrecy. Thus, he simply has no excuse for failing to hire
21 competent counsel to represent him before the USPTO in connection with his efforts to correct
22 perceived errors in his patent.

26 ^{4/} The document is dated May 1, 1987, and the USPTO stamp indicates that it was received
27 by the USPTO on May 4, 1987.

28 ^{5/} The document is dated May 6, 1987, and the USPTO stamp indicates that this document was received by the USPTO on May 11, 1987.

III

CONCLUSION

Hornback's Petition should be dismissed because he has not established that the Court has jurisdiction to consider it. Moreover, he is not entitled to mandamus relief because he has not pursued all other options of relief available to him before the USPTO.
